

VICE PRESIDENT

It is the duty of the Branch to give as much consideration to the election of a Vice-President as they do to the office of President. If this is done and the Vice-President works at learning the duties that face a Legion Officer, then it makes the selection of the next President a much easier task. Therefore, the Vice-President should not accept the nomination unless they are willing to move up to greater responsibility.

The Vice-President should be involved in every activity that is going on. It is important to provide guidance and support to each committee chairperson.

The President, in training his Vice-Presidents, should have them chair a meeting – not as a last-minute substitute, but as a planned event.

Above all, the Vice-Presidents should promote harmony – squash rumors and not indulge in Branch politicking. Their job is to help the President. All too soon they will be President and need the help and loyalty of their own Vice-Presidents.
